

Abstract

The present invention provides a method for the selective combinatorial randomization (SCR) of polynucleotides at specific sites which comprises providing a double stranded polynucleotide sequence having at least one differing site and selectively randomizing the polynucleotide at or in the proximity to the differing sites without the need for a determination of the sequence position of the differing site.